!@$%!!' I was having a really hard day, and it was definitely because of my hair. I even told Jensen. I kept trying to pull on it because it was a little shorter on one side. All I kept thinking was that the audience was never going to believe me because my hair is crooked. Lila is lying, but I have to be convincing, and no one is going to believe me because my hair is cockeyed."

Truth be told, Peluso has had a rough time of it hair-wise since hitting Bay City. "I also had some pretty bad hair days when Lila first appeared on the show," she notes.

"She was lying in bed with bandages on her wrist, and of course she had bed-head from lying in bed while recuperating from a suicide attempt. It's hard to have a good hair day when you're recuperating from a suicide attempt. And of course, they were shooting me from the back, so my hair was all you saw. It was pretty bad."

And the best? "The day we taped Josie and Gary's wedding," Peluso smiles. "I got to wear my hair all curled up and pretty. And what did it do for the life of my character? Nothing. Shane still wanted
