

sounds weird, but I think that being in show business and living in Hollywood, it's all a sacrifice for beauty.... Because the way the town thinks about age and beauty, it's a sacrifice to live under the scrutiny of the matinee-idol standards of Hollywood. The whole business is a sacrifice. What it costs to keep perming your hair or coloring it or fighting baldness with every product you can find — whatever it is. I wouldn't call it beauty — trying to stay at the surface of this mud puddle, rather than sink to the sludgy bottom — I'd call it part of my job. I am seriously treading water here in the name of beauty and longevity.

Digest: Which celeb's hair do you most covet?

Geary: Johnny Depp. His hair is thick and long with a great hairline. And he knows how to use it. He uses it as part of his arsenal of tricks as an actor. It's spectacular hair. His hair in Pirates of the Caribbean, that cross between a Rastafarian and rock star — great! In fashion, everything comes around again. The hip-huggers, for example, they're back. I wore them the first time around — to advantage. But I'm staying far away from them now! So, my longing for lots of hair to play with is tempered by my realization that at a certain age, it's unseemly ... not to mention impossible.

Digest: Which celeb do you most want to lend a comb to?

Geary: Donald Trump. What is that about?! You have all the money in the world and you look like that. If there was ever anyone in the public eye who needed a hair makeover, it's Donald Trump. Poor guy. □

NEW CENTURY VISTAR FILM CO.

Do Blondes Have More Fun? In the 1988 comedy film Pass The Ammo, with Bill Paxton and Tim Curry, Geary went to the dark side.

JIM WARREN

Grave Mistake? Geary says his early '90s look as Luke's cousin, Bill, was "misconceived."

CRAIG S. JOHNSON

Blowing In The Wind: The actor sported flowing locks in 1995.
